It is my privilege to welcome you to the Shepard Broad Law Center's inaugural summer workshop. You and your fellow members of our twentieth entering class, the class of 1996, will find that the Law Center offers an excellent legal education in a supportive learning environment.

This workshop provides an opportunity for you to work with faculty and administrative personnel in one portion of an overall academic enrichment program. Workshop classes introduce the approach used during the academic year. Your workshop faculty will provide training in substantive law—in this case, the study of bailments—as a means of introducing the analytical skills used in legal education and the practice of law. They will also involve you in the type of writing required of all law students.

Upperclass law students have generously given of their time to meet you and to work with you on keeping the law school experience in perspective. They have planned a superb extramural program. I hope to participate in several of these activities and to meet each of you before fall classes begin.

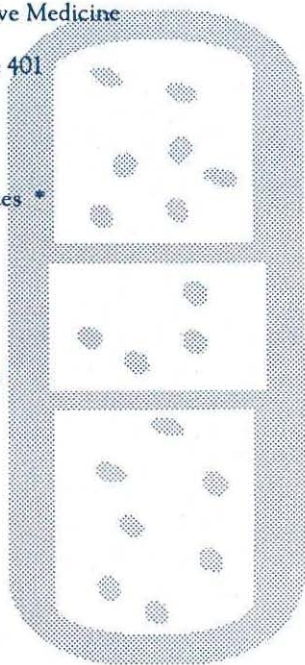

Very truly yours,

Acting Dean
