Giving

Beth Singer

All alone outside when it's dark and cold,
Sitting with little of her own to hold.
Every day it's always the same,
No food, no money, and there is some pain.

For years on his route he passed her by.
Always knowing her horrible cry;
The suffering that she endures,
Though people told him, "It's not yours."

Her misery he could no longer bear,
Giving his support was only fair.
He shared with her food and more,
Opening up a whole new door.

Now looking at life in a whole new way,
The man thanked his lucky stars for that day.
Helping others gave him a feel,
That all pain in the world was real.

From that day on the man decided,
By all his choices he would be guided.
Doing good for others gave him hope,
That one day mankind would help all cope.
