Name
by: Jamie Cohen

It's the way your lips curl when you say my name
You savor it like a fine wine
Every subtle hint, Every floral note
You elongate each syllable to prolong the taste
And relish the lingering essence

It's the way your hand moves when you write my name
You bring to life the printed page
Every delicate letter, Every dotted "i"
You steady your hand to make even curves
And marvel in the beauty of your penmanship

It's how my name to you is another language
Another alphabet of its own
You won't say my name in public
It's a secret for when we are alone
