ANTITHETIC

A silhouette sits in my mind
No purer beauty that I could find
Than that which rests right by my side
And teases me.
Her smile of pearls from the deepest ocean
Her voice a quartet of sweet emotion
I listen ever closely in hopes to hear
This music whistling my name.
Her hair such tresses of darkened rays
Her eyes I lose myself in for days
All so that as I sit and stare
I see in her my own reflection.
And all the while I get this thrill
I take a breath, let my heart be still
So that I may learn about the world
Through the one who carries it with her.

Born and raised in South Florida, Masood Mohammed enjoys writing and views it as “a form of expression without rules and limitations.” He also enjoys reading the latest news in science and technology and is an avid dancer in his free time.

Masood Mohammed is a First Year medical student.
