*Nova Southeastern University
Health Professions Division
Academic Year 2017–2018*

Chair's Message

Nova Southeastern University's Audiology Department was the first at any university in the world to offer an international post-master's Doctor of Audiology (Au.D.) program. The goal of this program is to augment and expand the academic and clinical knowledge base of the working professional with contemporary, evidence-based practice. Our graduates are from across the globe, hailing from the United Kingdom, Latin America, South Africa, Saudi Arabia, Malta, and China, among other places. The Au.D. program is clinically focused and culminates in earning the professional clinical Doctor of Audiology degree.

Classes, which are held at the University of Westminster in the Cavendish/Marylebone area of London, are offered in an extended-weekend, live format every other month for a period of approximately two years. Classes are taught by experts in the field from the United States and abroad. Between class modules, students work on clinical projects and assignments related to their current study topic. We have carefully designed this stimulating and challenging Au.D. program with the working audiologist in mind. To quote a recent graduate, "The Au.D. has helped me to be viewed as an equal to my highly educated colleagues and advance my clinical skills and knowledge. It has given me the confidence to know I am improving my patients' quality of life."

Welcome to NSU.

Erica B. Friedland, Au.D.
Chair and Associate Professor

Program Overview

The Doctor of Audiology (Au.D.) establishes audiologists in a clearly defined and prominent role within the hearing health care delivery system and strengthens their position as autonomous practitioners. The degree provides the academic foundation and diverse clinical experiences necessary to enter professional practice today and to stay abreast in the future. Doctor of Audiology students enroll in a clinically focused professional doctoral program where students complete a rigorous academic curriculum to augment and expand upon their current knowledge and skills in the field of audiology.

Program Outcomes

The graduate earning an Au.D. from the audiology program will be able to

1. demonstrate assessment methodology and the interpretation of assessment results with a variety of clinical populations
2. develop and implement a plan for audiological management and treatment based on clinical diagnostic data with a variety of clinical populations
3. collaborate and/or counsel effectively with patients, family members, care givers, and other professionals
4. evaluate and critically apply current research to determine and enhance clinical efficacy
5. demonstrate ability to assume a leadership role in business practices and supervision
6. apply appropriate technologies to accomplish research, diagnosis, management, and treatment

United Kingdom Program

The audiology department offers the Doctor of Audiology (Au.D.) program for audiological scientists and other qualified audiology practitioners. Faculty members from the United Kingdom and United States are partnering to offer the most diverse and advanced professional degree program in the world. Courses are offered in London, every other month, in an extended weekend format. By earning the Au.D., the graduate will enter one of the fastest-growing professions in the world. Our program at NSU is designed to prepare current audiology practitioners to respond to the expanding scope of professional practice and the continual technological advancements of the profession. Contact our UK program coordinator for further information by visiting nova.edu/aud or emailing audinfo@nova.edu.
