My Own Poem by Eric Rosenthal

Everyone believes that there is a destiny. Wish and wanted in something to believe. If there were no reason, in nothing to believe, could they accept their own reality? Most people could not accept, most people would still believe. They would never be able to see that there is nothing in which to believe. So they keep on praying, and they continue to hope. I stand by the side and watch at bay, while I am the one who will no longer pray.
