Grief

Suzanne Bern

It is an obscure gray—with the same opaqueness of a blacker than black night.
A dull moaning echoes through the soul like the whine of ghosts in endless catacombs.

All of it lingers on the nerves of the tongue like salt water that someone drinks slowly.

Such a sour, stale air clouds the sense of smell and infects the body.
It embodies the shadow that no one ever sees on a fog that is woven by confusion.

All the hate, love, life, joy, and pain combines and creates the mourning for what is lost.
