Each Other

Danielle LaRocco

Friends as close as you and I can read each other's minds,
One knowing glance, a sidelong glance, we understand and find
We need no explanation for exact events that passed,
Just a look like that portrays emotions at long last.

We understand when something's wrong the instant we first speak, Our tone of voice can let this bit of information leak.
We know by heart how we both work and handle conflicts too, You listen, help, and give advice; I do the same for you.

Even when I know you're wrong I always back you up, I always try to help you see you've got a half-full cup.
You always do the same for me, you tell me when I'm wrong,
But never fail to side with me and help me to be strong.

You trust in me, I trust in you, no deeper trust we'll find,
We never hesitate to share what's hiding deep within our minds.

We know everything about each other, or at least it's what we'd say,
But despite this all, we love each other always anyway.

We have fun even when we are sitting there in quiet,
But we never cease to have our frequent laughing riots.
We don't need to search, to look for something more to do,
I'm always in good company when spending time with you.

Though we'd like to, we can't spend all our time together,
But not a single time arises you're not there, not ever.
A million miles could be put between us, but there'd be no separation,
Not a foot, an inch, a centimeter parts us in this relation.

Friendships like ours are hard to find, are few and far between,
We've endured many problems, not many others have witnessed all we've seen
In each other's presence, each other's lives in each other's hearts we'll stay,
I know I'll let this friendship last forever and a day.
