M.S. in School Guidance and Counseling

The master's degree in school guidance and counseling is based on a developmental model that prepares students to function as guidance counselors in school systems. While the role of the school guidance counselor varies within and across schools, districts, and states, counselors increasingly serve in multiple roles, interacting and consulting with parents, teachers, school psychologists, and agencies to provide effective services to students (prekindergarten through grade 12). Counselors will be called upon to respond to students of varying backgrounds and ethnicities, and to interact with students in preventive and developmental ways. In addition to the profession’s traditional responsibilities of academic and career counseling, school guidance counselors address issues ranging from school violence, drop-out prevention, and truancy to depression, family conflict, and drug and alcohol abuse. The curriculum is designed to competently train professionals who will work with the individual student, teachers, parents, and the school community. The program consists of 46 semester hours of coursework, including two semesters of practicum training in a school setting.

Program Format and Locations

The program is designed for the working professional with courses offered in an intensive format, one weekend per month, with exception of the practicum. The practicum is conceived to be that phase of the master's degree program in which a counselor trainee is able to crystallize his or her educational experiences by actually translating theoretical constructs into practice. This type of supervised practice in counseling is generally viewed as an experience that assists the prospective counselor to function effectively in a future employment situation. The program is offered on the main campus in Fort Lauderdale, and student educational centers in Jacksonville, Miami, Orlando, Tampa, and West Palm Beach.
