Crime Scene at Nova

Since December, 1985, it seems as if Nova has been the victim of an important issue that rages across all college campuses, namely vandalism. In December, two Nova Undergraduate Day Division students reported vandalism to their automobiles. This vandalism occurred while their cars were parked and locked in the student parking lot to the south of Parker Building.

The first vandalism-theft incident was reported by Ron Walters:

1. One Escort radar detector valued at $250.00.
2. $7.00 in change.
3. One visor clip.
4. Damage to the illuminating system in his car therefore causing repair costs.
5. One 4 oz. bottle of Polo cologne.

Ron's statement to a Knight reporter revealed that the robber was someone who "knew what they were doing." Ron had parked his car towards the rear of the parking lot rolled up the windows, and locked the car before entering the Parker Building for class. When walking towards his car after his one p.m. class, he noticed the visor, above the driver's seat down. He wondered how that could be because he "knew that he had returned it to the up position before he had left the car." Upon entrance into the car, he saw that his radar detector was gone, along with $7.00 in change that had been in full view in the tray between the two front seats. Upon investigation, he discovered the other articles listed either missing or damaged. Ron immediately called Nova security and the Davie Police.

One and a half weeks later, Sue Coe, had her back right tire slashed while her car was parked in the Student Parking Lot. She had parked and locked her car to go to work at 4:00 p.m. About 6:00 p.m., she went out to Wendy's to get dinner but couldn't because her tire was flat. Her mechanics said that the tire had been slashed. Sue had to pay $50.00 for a new tire.

The latest act of vandalism occurred on Wednesday, December 8, 1986 between 1:51 p.m. to Loraine Richings. Ms. Richings works in the Registrar's office on the third floor in the Parker Building. A Knight reporter obtained the following information when interviewing Ms. Richings. Ms. Richings had returned from lunch at 1:00 p.m. and parked her car on the west side of the Parker Building in the employee/teacher parking lot. She remembers that it was raining that afternoon. Upon returning to her car at 5:00 p.m. to go home, she was horrified to see a "bunch of wires" instead of her brand new Blaupunkt cassette/AmFm car stereo which she had received as a Christmas present the week before. She told the Knight reporter that the Davie police stated the robber had used a "Slim Jim" to gain entry into the car, and there was no way to take fingerprints because the inside of the car, around the dash and driver's seat was soaked with rain.

After reading the above incidents of vandalism reported at Nova within the past month, one might ask - How can these horrible things happen at a small, friendly school like Nova? The reality is that they have happened and measures must now be instituted to prevent further vandalism acts on Nova Campus.

A Knight reporter spoke with one of the Physical Plant directors. He stated that Physical Plant is going to do everything in its power to wipe out vandalism at Nova University. Current proposed ideas are tighter security and more specified car patrolling.

The Draft

John Hartsell confided to me that he was taking some small risk in changing the newspaper's format. "We need a good front-page article, Steve." To be honest, what could I write which would be more than sweet space-filler? Something worth reading might come from what I distilled from my vacation's skim-reading list: Emile, Scientific Revolutions, 2001, 2010, The Early History of Roma (Liv), and some articles from the Miami Herald, Sun Sentinel. Let's be honest, the books were great in chapters, but sixteen days is hardly enough time to read more than fifteen pages, so I focused on listening to stories by some buddies who are in the armed forces and pondering the absurdity of scenarios proposed in two films, 2010 and Red Dawn.

Item: Red Dawn Assumes that "America stands alone."

Item: Roy Schieder in 2010, has to face down the space commander (the woman who played the lover of Baryshnikov in White Nights) and just 24 years from now, the Soviet Union and the USA are fighting over Central America - open warfare, because some nut in a battleship does to a Russian carrier what the Soviet Union did to that airplane which flew off course by Korean airspace. "The Soviet vessel split in two and eight hundred sailors drowned." uhoh.

Item: The article in the Sun-Sentinel, Jan. 1 reads:

"The US teenage population is shrinking and one of the first areas to be affected is the military. Unable to fill their volunteer quotas, the branches of the armed forces that recently have been enjoying the highest level of competency ever for enlistees are likely to turn to the draft within a few years to make up for this shortfall. (An extract from American Forecaster by Kim Lonb and Terry Reim.)"

Item: I have a friend in the Navy who has buddies in the Army. This is a story that comes to you third hand (Army to my friend, Navy to me, me to you). Here goes:

Sailors in U.S. uniform are in Honduras on what amounts to active duty - but they do not receive the bonus due them if they were at war. They are doing everything that a soldier at war would do, but they receive no official bonus - just a status called "TGY". If the US Congress had declared war, then these soldiers would be receiving special payments because of their position. Since war has not been declared with Nicaragua, these sailor's don't get the special benefits but they are given the status at least.

Item: I've heard that there are U.S. Marine reconnaissance companies in Honduras, but what does recon mean? Webster's suggests "investigating without making contact, without attacking, observing." (It actually says "a preliminary survey to gain information"). Suppose for a moment - this is hypothetical, of course - that these reconnaissance units are responsible for more than "surveying". Suppose that they take all measures necessary to make sure no US soldier gets left behind on Nicaraguan soil? Does that say something about what is going on down there? That's proof enough for me, friends. Who was it that drew a link between Southeast Asia and Central America? Besides growing great bananas in both regions, I'd say both places have a history of "American intervention and aggression in a state of undeclared war." That's clear enough for me.

But what can we do? Here's a tip from "Making your voice heard in Washington":

Making Your Voice Heard in Washington

Your voice matters. Elected officials rely on constituents’ mail to gauge back-home reaction to proposed legislation. Letters to legislators have more impact if some simple guidelines are followed:

1. Identify your legislators. If you do not know who your representative and senators are, contact your local Board of Elections or League of Women Voters.

2. Get the address right. The Honorable United States Senate Washington, D.C. 20510 Dear Senator or

3. The Honorable House of Representatives Washington, D.C. 20515 Dear Congressman

Dear Congresswoman

3. Identify the bill or issue you’re concerned with. Be as specific as you can—name the bill by number or popular title. You can usually get detailed information about legislation by calling or writing the legislative committee which deals with such issues.

4. Make your letter timely. Write while your legislators still have time to take effective action. Once a bill is out of committee or passed, there may be little they can do.

5. Write a personal letter. Form letters and petitions are less effective. Your legislators already know the positions of interest groups. Give them the benefit of your own insights and experience.

6. Be brief. Discuss only one issue in each letter. State this issue right up front. Your letter is one of thousands your legislator receives each week.

7. State your reason for taking your stand, and be constructive. If you think a bill is the wrong way to deal with a problem, suggest what you think is the right approach. Your legislators can be convinced.

8. Try to relate first-hand knowledge of community needs to national legislation. Include hometown editorials.

9. Be courteous. Never threaten. Never make promises. Don’t pretend to wield vast political influence. Don’t demand commitments from your legislators. There are at least two sides to every issue—sometimes dozens. Legislation is a complex process that involves compromise.

10. Include a return address and sing your name legibly. State family or work connections related to the issue which may serve as identification when your particular point of view is considered.

11. Get to know more about your legislators. Know their committee assignments and their voting records. This kind of information is readily available in public libraries. Try the Almanac of American Politics or the Congressional Directory.

What do you say peers? I’m out of danger from the draft, but you sub-26ers aren’t.

This sounds like an issue for the House’s Foreign Affairs Committee. The chairman and four of 42 members are from Florida. Broward County’s Larry Smith is one; others are Connie Mack, Dan Mica, Buddy MacKay, and Chairman Dante Fascell.

Pretty impressive seeing how Florida has 11.4 million or less than 5 percent of the US population and almost 10% of the seats on the Foreign Affairs committee. These guys would like to hear from you.

Dig this: The Senate has a "Select Committee on Ethics" (202) 224-2981. "Jurisdiction includes investigations of allegations of improper conduct and violations of the law; violations of the Senate Code of official conduct." Does this include investigating the unethical status of aggressive action against other nations? Members include Sen. Jesse Helms (North Carolina) and Russell Long of Louisiana.

Is that Long as in Huey Long? Is that the Jesse who received campaign contributions from tobacco growers? Can a person separate the consequences of his actions from the rightness or wrongness of an issue? Can Helms vote against tobacco subsidies without thinking of the next election?

Item: The Federalist Papers are a marathon of events that have been catered to my personal comedic needs. Plagiarism, HA. I laugh at the word. Whoever made that word up was copying me. Did you know that only a comic genius can find the humor in an every day circumstance? Take for instance "Dirty Socks" they may not seem funny to you now, but hey let’s not talk sock-talk. Sure I’ll admit I parodize certain comedic talents, but the whole premise of my column is a parody. And besides, where do you think those guys get this material? Mourning: The Loss Of Judicial Branches

"...of Joe’s blue eyes began to mist"

Christmas is a time of joy and a time of cheer,
a time of parties and too much beer,
a time of love for you and me, and a time of kidnapping

If you are a tree.

The night of the Nova College Christmas party was a night to go down in history. Not only were the halls decked with Holly, there were brawls decked, decked, and deeded. The Persian War exercise was the highlight of the evening and outshined and occurred of greater problematic importance.
The misfortune, which has shaken the stability of new legal studies program was the theft of the program’s living mascot. I am referring to none other than the Richard Parker Memorial Tree.

The tree was donated by the Executive Legal Studies Councilor in the Day Division, Dr. Joe Lakovitch. The warm-hearted professor donated the tree at his first lecture earlier this year. The lecture was dedicated to Richard Parker (an English seaman who fell to ill times and to the voracious appetites of fellow seafarers) whose untimely and distasteful death (A-1 Sauce was not yet invented) was the cause of a landmark trial (I believe it was Parker vs. Weight Watchers Anonymous). The highlight of the lecture was the donation of the tree, in Richard Parker’s name, to the legal studies students who were charged with the task of protecting the tree (for relation see "Chosen" in Elstons of Shannons).

The tree was firmly posted and placed at the entrance to the "second floor landing" and was forter to act as the legal studies mascot. The tree prospered and the college students grew fond of it. One could often see a future lawyer cooling and purring to its green leaves.

However, on the night of the Christmas party, terror struck.
The Richard Parker memorial tree was stolen. Some believe it was killed by Libyan death squads.

To Whom it may concern (and Amanda)

According to proper procedures, any material used in an original work, that was taken from another source, must be credited to the originator of that material. In Amanda’s latest enthralling column, he not only quoted verbatim some of the greatest comedy material ever written, he actually had the audacity to “improve” it. Steve Martin, one of the greatest comedians ever to draw air into his lungs, was one unfortunate victim. Amanda boldly states “…Andy Rooney, omnipresent, purple, and clairvoyant.” These words were unmercifully excised from “Grandmother’s Song” from side 2 of Martin’s 1977 album, “Let’s Get Small.” The perpetrator has rearranged the words with the assumption that no mortal would be clever enough to catch his error. The correct phrase is “…Be obsequious, purple, and clairvoyant be dull boring and omnipresent…”. Don’t let me wrong I have none but the utmost respect for this literary genius, but let’s give credit where credit is due.

Exhibit B: “Remember this is only an exhibition, not a competition, please no wagering.” This, as any true David Letterman fan knows, is one of Dave’s popular phrases. I am entirely pleased with the contents of his column, and I have thoroughly enjoyed all of his previous columns but I do hope Amanda will a bit more careful when writing his next column.

NOTE: When Amanda’s fan club is formed, I would be honored to be a member. In fact, I believe I will submit my candidacy for Presidency.

On a more serious note, I do hope Mr. Roloff can learn from this experience, and I hope he does not take this criticism personally. I think he’s a swell guy. By the way,

“Would you warm my pin, and be my b-tch?”

“And you know who you are!”

Ari’s Hideaway

Saludos my daahlings and welcome to the Hideaway. I hope your holiday was as good as mine was. Amanda spent the last week of December in an Assertiveness training camp. I learned how to say, “No I don’t want any more eggnog, Dammit!”

The Student Body Christmas Party started out the holidays with a bang, and you know who you are. Amanda himself showed up and looked maahvelous. A couple of my friends went Jim Beam, Johnnie Walker, and oh yes, don’t forget there are no losers in Women’s Body Building. Super Dave rolled into the New Year. Yes, he looked maahvelous, rolling around on the floor, praying to Voodoo gods to save his soul from a Witch-Queen.

He caressed the floor with a passion unknown to most men. But my daahlings, I do hope you had a good time. I know the floor was enjoying itself.

You know daahlings, I’ve been keeping an eye on the Dynamic Duo - Batman and Robin. What has happened to them over the years? Why is it Robin always shaved his legs? Did Batman only like young men in tight party house. or was Robin really a super-hero? And you know what I mean. Why is it Robin always says “Holy…”?

And no one ever kills the dynamic duo in a regular fashion. Instead of just shooting Batman in the head, a “Special” villain spends millions of dollars to fry Batman like an egg, or make him into a human ice cream cone. But doesn’t he “look” maahvelous even then? Robin isn’t too smart though. He’s always asking Batman who they’re fighting. Just because Caesar Romero is dressed like a clown is no reason to believe he’s the Joker. It must take years of “Bat-Research” to figure that one out. Holy-Jokerama daahlings. What about that maahvelous Penguin? He looks … stupid. Just be thankful Robin doesn’t say; “Holy-Bird-Bath Batman,” when he figures out who the little man dressed like Pansy-The-Petunie is.

Oh well daahlings that’s it for the dynamic-duo. Amanda would like your help in marketing his new line of Latin grooming aids. I have the new Huesos-Rancheros hair gel maahvelous. My new line of Arros-con-pollos facial, and daahlings my favorite after-shave has the aroma of pinto beans.

Please stay tuned for fan club info.

And remember, it is better to look good than to feel good.

Director Wants To Meet With Students

In recent weeks, the Director of the college, Dr. Phil DeTurk has exhibited an extra-effort in his attempts to "get to know the students". He has donated his custom made suggestion-box to THE NOVA KNIGHT (for Letters to the Editor), been a guest speaker at a recent SGA meeting and has called for monthly meetings with the students.

Every month, Dr. DeTurk would like to meet with students in a non-formal atmosphere. All students would be welcome to attend but the presence of club and organization representatives is necessary. The meetings will not follow any conduct format, they will simply be discussion. The purpose is to encourage student-Director relations. The discussions will center around problems, suggestions and questions which both parties may have. Dr. DeTurk is giving the students their opportunity to address him concerning most any college problem (i.e., Student Union). The dates and times of the meetings will be posted and all students will be asked to attend.

John Houseman Sells His Intellect

It is difficult to believe that a respected journal of the future, DISCOVER, (with a special report titled "America in 2035: New York City permanently flooded. If only politicians had heeded warnings about carbon dioxide build-up and global warming in 1985") would be the target for an assault on our Shark FIN intelligence. Readers of the magazine presumably share an awareness of the problems which environmental hazards pose for future generations. We can assume that they want to do something or see something done to reverse these trends.

DISCOVER seems an unlikely audience for John Houseman to demonstrate his mercenary side, especially since many law students probably read the magazine for its four-page spreads on fast cars. In the January 1986 issue, Ford introduces a car with a fine zodiacal name, The Bull, but the fancy photography doesn't appeal to the bibliophile like the pages 5-8 where Houseman's image dominates almost 45% of the paid-space.

To a legal studies student our champion of the bar exam would not have us break rules of logic in arriving at legal conclusions. Does his love of the obvious and old fashioned extend to hoping we will listen to his pitch for books? Let's face it, a $35 book is not what you bring to college to study, nor can you read it in front of a toasty fire. "You'll spill beer and bourbon on my Goethe." Or perhaps your mom will be visiting and say, "The cigar ash doesn't mix well with these pages, dear". Take a moment and groan with me.

Please Mr. Houseman!

"You will acquire only one great personal library in your lifetime. Why not choose the best?

First, is this an appeal for the national campaign to read president Carter's autobiography.

Second, is it possible to say will about something so personal? So uniquely square and ostentatious as seeking to acquire a library?

Now I lay me down to rest. I pray I never seek the best. I hope I always buy my books with regard to how they look. (Don't worry)

Best books like virgins can't be dated their value falls when annotated.

Please Easton Press located in Norwalk, CT. not the depressing steel town of Pennsylvania. Forget the ad copy stolen from a funeral preparations commercial.

Because of the extraordinary care required in printing and binding the books are issued on a per month. Give us a break. 100 books means eight years before I get all the books. Hey, I know I read slowly but what's the point. At $37.50 each, I could pay for one third of the Lee Iaccoca offspring or save to Ethiopians.

Why don't we learn how to read? How come we are not taught not to write in books? What is the point of highlighting sections when all we know is that at the time we read the passage, it seemed important.
Album Reviews

Artists United Against Apartheid Sun City.

1985 will certainly be known as the year music came to everyone's aid. We saw charity songs about subjects from suicide prevention to feeding the world. We saw Live Aid, Farm Aid, AIDS-Aid, Hearing Aid and a whole sleugh of other charitable publicity stunts. One of the least publicized of these events is SUN CITY, anti-Apartheid-Aid.

Former Springsteen guitarist, Miami Steve Van Zandt isn't the first musician to speak out against South Africa's Apartheid rule. Stevie Wonder has been arrested several times protesting outside the South African embassy. Peter Gabriel's 1978 song "Biko" provided the inspiration for SUN CITY.

SUN CITY is more for artists than for fans. It is a plea by many top pop, jazz, rock and rap musicians to their fellow musicians not to play at Sun City. Sun City, a multi-million dollar Las Vegas style casino in the slums of Bophuthatswana, serves as a symbol of Apartheid segregation policies. Though Sun City attempts to appear desegregated, few blacks can afford to attend. Artists such as Stevie Wonder and Diana Ross have turned down six and seven figure contracts to play Sun City. Miami Steve and other Artists United Against Apartheid are urging all artists not to play Sun City.

Unfortunately, the music on the album is not as good as the cause it valiant. Although dozens of top stars were recruited for the SUN CITY sessions (Springsteen, Dylan, Bono, Geldof, Jimmy Cliff, Miles Davis, Jackson Browne, Herbie Hancock, Fat Boys, Hall and Oates are but a few), only two versions of the albums title track truly convey the spirit in which the album was intended. Sadly, once-in-a-lifetime combinations such as Peter Gabriel and Shankar or Bono, Keith Richards and Ron Wood fail, and the results, though not unbearable, are certainly not outstanding. The pop, jazz and rock audience for which SUN CITY was intended will find it fairly inaccessible, as some fine musicians are lost behind blaring drum machines.

You could do worse than buying SUN CITY. The cause is certainly good enough, and the interesting combinations are probably worth at least a listen or two. However, you may be better off buying the SUN CITY 12", and/or sending in a contribution. And if anyone asks ya', tell 'em "I ain't gonna play Sun City."

The Dream Academy

Excellent debut from this U.K trio. Though they may look very Thompson Twins, THE DREAM ACADEMY music is far more intense and intellectually demanding than the Twins. Produced by Pink Floyd Guitarist David Gilmour, his influence at the helm is obvious. That's not saying THE DREAM ACADEMY sounds like Floyd, because they don't. If anything THE DREAM ACADEMY are more similar to Gilmour's solo efforts, or to The Psychedelic Furs in their heavy use of cello and symphonic instruments.

But THE DREAM ACADEMY album is unique. To compare it to other works is to take away from the originality and complexity of this fine debut. One good listen to the first single "Life In A Northern Town" should be enough to convince you THE DREAM ACADEMY will be a potent force in music in the coming years. By far the best new band of the decade thus far.

Iron Maiden

Live After Death

With LIVE AFTER DEATH, Iron Maiden proves that the icon of the 70's record industry, the double live album, is far from dead. Recorded during Maiden's 11 month, 24 country World Slavery Tour, LIVE AFTER DEATH features all the usual live album accessories; Equipment Lists, tour schedules, merchandise order forms, lots of shots of the band mugging at the camera at various locales, etc. Since Maiden rehearded for the tour right here in South Florida, one photo even shows the band at play at Six Flags Atlantis. The Album also features vital stats no Maiden fan would dare be without. For example, on the 250 concert tour, the band went through 50,000 cans of beer, 30,000 soft drinks, 6,000 pints of milk, 25,000 pints of orange juice, 7,778 hotel rooms, 6,392 guitar strings, 3,670 drum sticks, 3,008 guitar picks and traveled more than 100,000 miles. They also became the first heavy metal band to play behind the Iron Curtain, doing several gigs in Poland.

If finding out what type of instruments they use and seeing lots of photos of the band isn't enough to interest you, rest assured LIVE AFTER DEATH contains a fine selection of Maiden material.

Rather than rely exclusively on new stuff, (a la Bruce Dickinson), the album is fairly well split between new and old, with Bruce proving he can handle Paul DiAnndo's brutal vocals in his own unique way. Well produced by Martin Birch (Sabbath, Purple) and recorded with the Rolling Stones Mobile in California and London, LIVE AFTER DEATH is a fine example of the hard driving metal your mother used to yell at you for listening to.

Raping South Florida.

The leaders of the Nova College's Forum on Women's Issues will have some good news and some bad news. The nation will force Congress to push a comprehensive legislative act called "The People's Right To Choose Act" by June as a result of the media attention drawn to women's issues during the March on Washington in March.
The legislation eventually, passes and the ERA goes into effect in 1987. The full provisions of the Act will cover a wide range of issues, lumping euthanasia and abortion with a moratorium on animal experimenting and lesbian snubbing.
(Spouse-abuse will be outlawed by this act and requests to empty the garbage during a Air Force· texas A&M game will result in Bye. Chains will reopen after name changes to read "Kentucky
Fried Thoroughbred" and "Pd Folks Can't Eat Heah." Menus will read,
"All ingredients were raised in Tooley-approved environments and experienced painless and stress-free exits from biological existence." Jokes about ethical treatment of animals and "a seven-year-old in Saigon" will replace gay, Polish and Ethiopian jokes. "Pot" do fole grassee will triple in price three times in less than eight months, leading the US Administration to abandon its war on drugs in order to stop importation of illegal livers, including human livers dressed to smell like gosebumps.

The bad news for Nova College's Forum for Women's Issues will be that the net profit of the year's bake sales will fall 20%, over 1985, leading the group to vote to donate blood in hopes of getting more media attention and maybe an angel to send them to Reykjavik to celebrate the first anniversary of the Women Stop Work Day.

The feared pen of Guido will return in a ghoulish resemblance to Nightmare on Elm Street, complete with the bookworm's sense of macabre. With tattoos of Jean Kirkpatrick and Bob Dylan, and pho netic spellers reading "Can you say 'supply-side economics', boys and girls?" the worm will enter, Rambo-like, the ears of students who spend less than two hours per week at a library reading about animal ethics. An epidemic of ear infections will seem to sweep through campus, stopping only in the last week of each term, and hitting every class except the Humanities Department. Business majors will flee to study legalese, not out of respect for Constitutional history or out of a sense of duty-as-a-citizen, but motivated solely by a Hobbesian "in-cell-igence", as it will be later called: a primitive, pre-civilized gene will be identified in the 21st Century as the force which reversed a nearly-disastrous trend of robbing Plato to pay Adam Smith, Chicago First National and Bebe Rebozo. The surprising result will not be realized until 2019 when six of nine Supreme Court Justices will have been appointed by parents of students who had graduated from Nova's Legal Studies Program. Other pleasant side-effects of the renewed interest in the past will be the establishment of the Leo Strauss Memorial in Parker Room 203 and the discovery of a tree, planted in 1985 in memory of Jose Arcadio Buendia, on the east end of a pond located less than two hundred feet north of the Mailman building.

In Sports, Joel Onigbinde will spend the first two weeks of February writing the sports column for the entire year, making numerous mistakes and even remembering to put the title "Mr." in front of the basketball coach's name. No complaints will be received from either players or readers of The Nova Knight (note the lack of union between sets A and B) and Mr. Onigbinde will receive a forty-inch color TV and VCR in appreciation of his contribution to the PR campaign run by the Office of University Relations. The VCR will have an input for holographic display and during the presentation of the award, Joel will press the wrong button and be available in the future for only 2 hours at a time. If quality of the holographic image isn't important, the extended-play position of 360 minutes would be available were it not for Joel's insistence that viewers be able to count the number of pearly whites he displays when complaining "I don't get no respect" and sharing Nigerian folk wisdom ("Who Cares?").

The second floor of Parker Building has over 1,400 fluorescent lights (23 banks by 27 banks by 4 lights per bank) which will be revealed to be causing depression, hyperactivity, admiration for Rev. Falwell, AIDS, food allergies, illiteracy and an insensitivity to constructive criticism. In desperation to solve the mid-decade blues, the Director will look through his files and find a brochure delivered anonymously 8 months before telling about a super fluorescent bulb that simulates sunlight and costs twice what bulbs at K-Mart cost. Without letting the student body know, the Director, driven half-mad with threats of suicide from the faculty, and fearing the enormous task of finding replacements to work for such low pay teaching the incorrigible misfits of the eighties, will secretly install all of the bulbs on a Saturday night. The good news will be that the AIDS, food allergies and bibliophobia will disappear immediately but in the wave of rational thought which will return to the campus (was it ever here?), the suggestion box overflows with letters of resignation from professors seeking better paying positions at institutions which don't claim to be at the center of Innovation and which light buildings the old-fashioned way.

The final prediction: this page will be covered with more bird droo than the Sunday "Looking for a Home" section of the Miami Herald.

On December 17, 1985, Dania Jai-Alai held one of its charity events. This one was for Nova University. Further inquiries revealed that as a law, all parimutuals must hold events that benefit non-profit organizations. To qualify, such organizations submit their names to the parimutuals and their names are added to already existing lists. The parimutuals then choose a day and an organization; the proceeds from the events go to the non-profit organization. Nova is on five lists: Gulfstream, Hollywood Dog Tracks, Flagler, Dania Jai-Alai, and Pompano Tracks. Nova raises in amounts from $17,000 - $42,000 annually.

What A Night

The International Students Association of Nova University had an important event last year.
It was a night of surprises. First a talent show, then a festival of international food, and to end the night, there was a party with international flavor.

Asking Jorge Roman, president of NISA about the event, he explored that the objectives of that event were:

"To welcome new foreign students and to give them a hand in adapting themselves to the new environment.

To join the Intensive English Program students in the activities of Nova University, because they are also part of the Nova International Association.

"To be aware that the International Association is an organization in the school that has the purpose of helping the needs of foreign students.

"To join the whole university as one, through a smile and a friendly hand."

He also wanted to thank the work of all the people who contributed to the event, actively participating in or assisting it.
All this reporter can say is that, it really was an exciting change for Nova University in every cultural and social aspect. The talent show had a variety of national­ ties. There were: the arabic dance, the aztec play, the Japanese song, the "you look marvelous" dance, an Ecuadorian duet, an American solo and others.

Every act deserves a congratula­ tion for the effort the students put on them.
