1-1-2014

Everything is Nothing

Faren Rajkumar
Nova Southeastern University

Follow this and additional works at: http://nsuworks.nova.edu/digressions

Part of the Poetry Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: http://nsuworks.nova.edu/digressions/vol11/iss1/3

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the CAHSS Journals at NSUWorks. It has been accepted for inclusion in Digressions Literary Magazine by an authorized administrator of NSUWorks. For more information, please contact nsuworks@nova.edu.
Everything is Nothing

Author Note
In addition to my Biology and English studies, I’m a classical violinist of 14 years. My ultimate career aspiration is to serve my country as a physician in the U.S. Armed Forces. But I also hope to pair my knowledge of medicine and science with my love for literature, and someday write about these topics for magazines, newspapers, television, and hopefully even author novels of any genre.
My mind went blank again.

When I don’t have a pen and I’m all alone with my thoughts sitting heavy in the air,

The brilliant words in my head, that come and go quickly, fall away into nowhere.

They wilt, they grow quiet, and pretty soon retreat like a tide,

They hide away in a place so deep, I’m not even sure it’s still called my insides.

All is silent, all is still, and disturbingly calm,

Moments like this leave me in a stupor, every sensible idea gone.

But when I sit like this, without a thought in my head, with absolutely nothing to do,

I remember science says everything came from nothing, in one sudden and unlikely “boom.”

So my empty head and long lost thoughts, the ones I couldn’t reach even if I called,

Maybe aren’t as useless as I thought; I may be on to something after all.